

2021 CAPITOL CURRENTS

32nd Alaska State Legislature ~ 1st Session

Twelfth Edition

~ Much ado about what to do with the Biden Bucks ~

HIGHLIGHTS

The Legislature is back in business after Spring break. They continue to work through their punch lists and figure out the puzzles while the clock laughs out loud at the 90 - day statutory deadline - April 19th.

Public testimony in House Finance on the proposed FY22 operating and mental health budgets started Thursday and ended Saturday. The final legislative money dance has begun. It will be in slower motion this year so they can carefully consider the gigantic federal cash infusions.

There have been significant changes to the Governor's budget - e.g., a House subcommittee dumped cost shifts to municipalities for misdemeanor prosecution - but not like the last Legislature when the Governor proposed extensive cuts to pay for a dividend under the statutory formula.

Of course, the dinosaur in the room – PFD amount – is on the back burner but remains front and center in the minds of many.

Tribes are trying to figure out how best to spend more than $1 billion in federal support. They can take three years to decide with more leeway than under the Cares Act but will have to justify and document spending.

Alaska is looking at election reform but no rush. As we understand, 8 ideas are floating in the Capitol – two from the Governor, three from D's and three from R's. Some think this may be the right time for the conversation. Still, don't expect major action on it until next session.

Mail in ballots, enhancing campaign financial disclosure and addressing the powers of the Division of Elections are central issues. Legislators say there is little connection with reform efforts in other states.

The Senate's primary vehicle for election changes (SB 39) will be heard Thursday, the 15th at 3:30pm when SSTA Chair Shower unveils a proposed committee substitute that probably will address at least the biggest complaints about the original version. Should be interesting.

Domestic violence and sexual assault service providers are genuinely concerned about potential large cuts to the federal Victims of Crimes Act (VOCA) funding. This could have catastrophic effects on their ability to maintain shelters and sexual assault services in Alaska. They are counting on the state to make up the difference.

COVID-19 news. Alaska health officials have detected the state's first case of the South Africa mutant coronavirus strain that spreads more easily and may be less affected by the vaccines. But so far they think the options currently available in the US "provide an adequate degree of protection".

There is a growing concern that we can't reach herd immunity until more folks get over vaccine hesitancy. Governor Dunleavy says the coronavirus has been a nightmare, but things are looking up. The Governor and the Legislature are doing their best to mitigate.

For example, the Governor is launching a national ad campaign to sell Alaska to potential visitors; he sent a report to the President describing the economic impacts of another season without large cruise ships, and a letter to CDC urging them to allow cruise ships to sail again; SJR 9 by Senator Kiehl, just signed by the Governor, calls on the federal government to pause for now the laws that prevent the big ships from coming this summer.

The famous Alaska Performance Scholarship is falling short, according to a recent report by the McDowell Group. Payouts are less than half of amounts anticipated; millions of dollars aren't being used each year. Barriers may be SAT/ACT requirements and the instability of the University of Alaska system.

HEDC will hear a presentation on the program and receive recommendations from the McKinley Research Group (formerly the McDowell Group) Monday at 8am prior to hearing HB 48 AK Performance Scholarship; Eligibility sponsored by Rep. Story.

ISER (UAA's Institute for Social and Economic Research) says the state needs to spend more on building maintenance for our K-12 schools. Professor Bob Loeffler argues that the level of funding is unsustainable, and the facilities will degrade without additional cash.

After oral arguments on Tuesday, the Supreme Court ruled for the Governor on Thursday reversing a Superior Court decision that he was prohibited by law from making recess appointments to boards, commissions and his Cabinet of the same people lawmakers had failed to confirm.

They declared the law unconstitutional, ending the dispute. The 2020 appointees didn't lose their positions. Appointments requiring confirmation remain in effect until the Legislature acts on them in joint session. President Micciche promised this year's appointment votes would happen before they leave.

A busy Supreme Court also ruled the legislature violated the state constitution when it arbitrarily limited some public employees who left state employment and withdrew their retirement contributions from paying them back and returning to the deeply coveted Tier 1 program. 78,000 Alaskans are affected.

Alaska is suing manufacturers of the highly toxic PFAS compounds that have contaminated groundwater all over the state, including DuPont and 3M. This may be in response to a letter from a bipartisan group of 16 legislators asking the Governor to act. Environmentalists said it is long overdue.

Attorneys can now visit their clients in state correctional facilities, according to a judge in a recent opinion. The Department stopped in-person visits in March 2020 due to COVID-19. Defense lawyers argued the ban deprives clients of their right to counsel.

As we understand, policies vary but most Alaska hospitals now allow at least one visitor per patient. Huge for loved ones who have had to deal with intermediaries but now can be physically present

GOVERNOR'S CORNER

Governor Dunleavy just appointed Jim Cockrell, former head of both Wildlife and State Troopers, to lead the Alaska Department of Public Safety. Commissioner-elect Cockrell started with the department in 1983 and retired as a Colonel in 2017.

Boomer fact: I worked with Cockrell's father during the Cowper Administration in the mid 1980's, when he served as the Governor's top security officer. He was a respected, high ranking trooper.

The Governor announced two judicial appointees to the superior and district courts in Fairbanks. The judges were selected from a group of individuals nominated by the Alaska Judicial Council.

Maria Pia L. Bahr has been appointed to the Fairbanks District Court. Ms. Bahr has been an Alaska resident for 5 ½ years and has practiced law for 30 years. She is currently the Senior Assistant Attorney General in the Opinions, Appeals & Ethics section in Anchorage.

Trisha Haines has been appointed to the Fairbanks Superior Court. Ms. Haines has been an Alaska resident for 10 years and has practiced law for 9 years. She is currently a staff attorney for the court of appeals in Anchorage and resides in Fairbanks.
